GREETINGS FROM THE KRGK TEAM...

GOLF TIP...

Uncontrolled chipping

Q ... On short chips I often fluff or stab the ball, even though I know my set-up is sound. Why?

A ... The main reason for fluffing a chip is quitting on the shot and not attacking the ball with purpose. This deceleration is frequently an effect of too long a backswing. If you take the club back a long way, you naturally become worried that the ball will fly too far after impact. You react to this feeling by slowing down into impact and don't attack the ball firmly with authority. This loose, unconfident action with a stunted follow-through, means that you either hit weakly behind the ball – a fluff – or stab the shot. The only time your backswing should be full for a shortish chip is when you have to play a deliberate cut-up shot – perhaps over trouble. But even for this shot you must be firm through the ball – don't quit.
