Tip from Thys...

Thinning Traumas

Just when you need a decent strike to be sure of hitting a par 3 or firing a chip in close, poor technique lets you down. A thin is one of the more common results of a bad swing, but you can avoid it by making a few simple changes in your style.

Question: I thin my irons off a tee peg. Please can you tell me why?

Answer?

Your problem could well be that you tee the ball up too high. When a ball teeters on top of a peg about an inch (2.5cm) above ground level, you are forced into striking it on the upswing.

Seeing a ball sitting up high on a tee naturally makes your body move into the wrong positions. Your left shoulder tends to rise up too quickly in your attempt to swing the clubhead up and into the back of the ball. If you're lucky, the face catches the ball squarely and you strike it well but on a higher trajectory than you want. But the bottom of the blade is equally likely to strike the middle or just below the centre of the ball – hence the thin. It doesn't have to be a very badly bladed shot for the ball to shoot through the green – even a mild thin can do that.

Peg it down

A sure cure is to tee the ball much lower. You should use a tee peg to give you a better lie than you would get on the ground. This means raising the ball off the turf only a fraction – not propping it up way off the deck. Playing from a pushed in tee peg – so only the head is visible – makes the ball sit invitingly without being too high off the ground. What's more important is that this teeing method makes your swing naturally better. To strike your irons and flight the ball well, you need to swing into impact on a downward path. Teeing the ball down promotes this correct swing and helps you extend fully through the ball.
