A Bit of History...

In 1950, at the Tam O'Shanter World Championship in Nilus, Illinois, a remarkable and rare golf story unfolded. It was a tense and highly competitive tournament, with some of the world's top golfers participating. However, one particular player, Jimmy Demaret, managed to create a golfing feat that has rarely been replicated.

On the final day of the tournament, Demaret found himself in a difficult situation. He was on the 18th hole and needed to make a birdie to force a playoff. However, his tee shot ended up in the rough, and it seemed nearly impossible for him to reach the green in two strokes. Undeterred, Demaret took a mighty swing and incredibly hit the ball directly into the hole from 230 yards away for an albatross, which is a score of 3-under par on a hole that is usually a par 5. This astonishing feat allowed him to secure a tie for first place and ultimately win the playoff, making Jimmy Demaret's albatross one of the rarest and most incredible shots in golf history.

Close up after green has been groomed.
