Just joking...

One sunny afternoon, two friends, Brent & Les, decided to play a round of golf. They were both maverick golfers but loved the game nonetheless. As they approached the first tee, a sign caught their attention: "Golf and laughter are synonymous."

Les turned to Brent and said, "Well, we're definitely going to have a lot of 'synonyms' today!"

They began their round, and true to form, their shots were wild and unpredictable. On the fifth hole, Brent hit a particularly horrendous shot that went flying into the bushes.

"Watch out for the trees, Brent!" Les shouted.

"Don't worry," Brent replied with a grin, "I'm an arborist in my spare time!"

Les burst out laughing, nearly falling over. "An arborist? More like a 'branch manager' with that swing!"

They continued to joke and laugh their way through the course, enjoying each other's company more than the game itself. As the sun began to set, they finished their round, both with scores not to be spoken of.

As they walked off the course, Brent turned to Les and said, "You know, I think we've mastered the 'laughter' part of golf, if not the actual game!"

Les nodded, still chuckling. "Who needs a perfect swing when you have a perfect sense of humour?"

And with that, they headed to the 19th Hole, already planning their next round of "synonymous" golf.
