🎉The Joker Has Been Jagged!🎉

Well folks, the ploy finally jagged it last night — and Ivan du Plooy is now R105K richer! 🎉💰

I even went up to him with a stethoscope just to make sure his heart was still beating afterwards, and yes, it was! Beating strong and steady. 🍷lol

The funniest part? When Ivan took the card, it was almost as if he was joking about it, and, excuse the pun... He took the Joker! We all thought he was pulling our leg, but nope, he actually jagged it!

The kitty will do a full recon and confirm the final details, but the new Jag the Joker will start at around approx. R25K, and we'll advise everyone on the new start date soon and actual kick off amount.

A massive congratulations to Ivan du Plooy, one of our members, and proud part of the Neefetjies. Well done, Ivan — what a win! 🍷🍷

Enjoy your weekend, Ivan... we're sure you will! 🍷🍷

7 Golf Course Management Tips to help Lower scores – Dwayne Basson Your Pro

1. Focus on What You Want

Avoid constantly thinking about what you don't want on the course and instead focus on the shot you are trying to execute. When golfers see water, a bunker, or out of bounds they usually think, don't hit it there. The problem is that the subconscious mind doesn't understand negative statements. So try to always have positive thoughts.

2. Play One Shot Shape

If the best players in the world struggle in competition to hit it both ways, you probably will too. Even though some of you probably can hit it both ways, one shot shape is more reliable and helps to avoid the big misses which is important to help lower scores in golf. Find your stock shot shape and stick to it!

3. Learn How to Pick Targets Correctly

One of the oldest pieces of golf advice is "aim small, miss small" when it comes to picking targets. It's touted by sports psychologists as one of the best tried and true pieces of advice ever. I remember many coaches over the years telling me the same thing.

4. Aim for the Middle of the Green More Often

Stop flag hunting so often.

Most golfers try to attack pins all the time, thinking that's the only way to make birdies. However, don't forget about shot dispersion - no matter how good you get, you will always miss some shots left and right of your intended target. The longer the club, the wider the dispersion.

5. Develop a Pre-Shot Routine

A pre-shot routine is something you need to first create and then practice on the range. Don't just hope it shows up on the course for you if you haven't spent time honing it at the practice tee. Find a routine that you feel comfortable with and repeat it with every shot you hit. It's harder than it may seem to stay disciplined and do it every time but definitely well worth it.

6. Avoid double/triple bogeys

If you're in trouble, do everything you can to give yourself a putt at par or sometimes even a bogey, don't try to force a birdie or par and end up walking away with a double/triple bogey.

7. Play Conservatively When Your Swing Is Off

The final course management tip is to play more conservatively, not more aggressively, when things aren't going your way.

Off days are part of the game and something you need to learn how to deal with. When most golfers are swinging poorly, they usually try to play more aggressively after a bad hole. But this is the wrong approach and usually leads to bigger misses and higher scores.
